

Thoughts of a conversation architect through connecting in silence

Constantin-Cristinel Radu (cristi.radu@clicknet.ro) has a long teamwork experience (national and international), advanced communication skills, deep involvement into the local community education, being an active volunteer in Long Life Learning. He owns two patents and is experienced in technical representation in Romania for some western companies.

Abstract:

Beyond any specific personal interest and hobbies, how many times do we reflect about what we are representing? Basically, since the very early stages, we are facing a “thick communicational wall”. Even if, in a goodwill approach, you try to do your best to show that your preoccupations are meant to contribute in a (questionable) manner to the human progress, you are forced to learn so quickly that the society “working” rule is : “be like us, in order to validate our own existence, if you dont want to be labeled as a kind of freak”. The society development stage is measured, among others by the (in)tolerance level reached by the respective society and the permeability to personal development.

According to this criterion, the actual evaluation is quite easy and the answer unfortunately is easy to be established .

Key words: conversation, communication, “global communication era”

Contrary to the expectations of a certain social segment, our society shows some involution or with other words, took off the mask worn in the comunist era, showing its real and hideous face. Maybe, at a certain point, we have to embrace the idea that the values and rules existing in evolved societies, do not exist nor apply to us. Perhaps, sometimes we were “thrilled” by our own personality or achievements, but each and every time we are brutally brought back with the feet on the ground. Maybe only few are among Cioran’s followers, but it is clear that, if we like or not, many are willing to accept as valid for our times the diagnosis put by the famous philosopher.

How many of us concluded that it’s worth to follow this attitude , even if thus nothing really changes, as only support to reveal the spiritual resources to go on?

How easy is it to communicate, even in the special case of people with major contribution inside the community ? As we know, the very market – within the middle of life, as Tofler liked to say - is nothing else than conversation about the workmanship, goods and services, a conversation based on many interests crossing... It is required to connect, both “online” and “offline”, to converse, building trust by communication within all possible channels... Despite the “global communication era” the actual communication is more and more formal and impersonal.

I wander how many people, except some who really know me, show a form of interest for this kind of intelectual exercise, communicating and aswering... If none, it does not matter how selfish and liberal it may seem, the result will outline the idea that the last salvation form is the individual one, as ultimate resistance resort against “contamination”.